There are potentially serious security issues with any computer connected to the Internet without the appropriate protection, regardless of whether the connection is made through a wireless network, a cable modem, dial-up access, or otherwise. These security issues range from viruses, worms, and other programs that can damage the user's computer to attacks on the computer by unauthorized or unwanted third parties (hackers). Some of the risks of compromised security include unprotected files on the computer becoming exposed to third parties who may have criminal intent and malicious damage to a user's computer or even a whole company's network, up to and including the destruction or deletion of files or the re-formatting of drives. It is recommended that any user connecting to the Internet via a wireless connection use Virtual Private Network system to protect their personal information, although even that may not protect from eavesdropping and other types of attacks. Note that security on the Internet is a rapidly changing landscape with new attacks springing up often. All users should also consult a security expert to determine whether there are any potential security holes in their computer's configuration. The suggestions given herein are provided as a courtesy and do not replace specific personalized advice provided by your network administrators, company computer security personnel, or other security experts with whom you may be working.

While there is no such thing as "perfect security" and AccessAgility cannot guarantee the prevention of the loss, misuse, or alteration of data, we take industry-standard measures to protect such loss, misuse, or alteration of data. AccessAgility uses physical, electronic, and procedural safeguards to reduce the likelihood of accidental disclosures and unintended access of customer information. All employees, contractors, and other companies engaged by AccessAgility are contractually required, through signed, internal non-disclosure agreements, to keep customer information confidential and not to use it in any way other than what is necessary to perform their work for AccessAgility. Violations of these policies can result in termination in the case of employees, the severing of contractual obligations in the case of contractors and other companies, and in civil and criminal penalties if warranted and applicable by law. Security is also provided through your web browser, which supports 40, 56 or a 128-bit version of encryption with the SSL (Secure Sockets Layer) security protocol. When you visit any AccessAgility website, your personal account information is encrypted when transmitted across the Internet, using the highest degree of security applicable with the SSL security protocol.
